

Forestry Blacksmith Drops Dead

On Thursday of last week, the local forestry service received word that Charlie Douthit, who for the past several years has occasionally been employed by the government as blacksmith, dropped dead from heart failure in his shop near Kyle, Macon county, the preceding day.

The deceased was doing some work for the forestry service at the time of his death. He did not speak after being stricken.

The Franklin Press, 1 August 1929